People + AI Research (PAIR)

Human-centered research and design to make AI partnerships productive, enjoyable, and fair.

About the team

The past few years have seen rapid advances in machine learning, with new technologies achieving dramatic improvements in technical performance. But we can go beyond optimizing objective functions. By building AI systems with users in mind from the ground up, we open up entire new areas of design and interaction.

PAIR is devoted to advancing the research and design of people-centric AI systems. We're interested in the full spectrum of human interaction with machine intelligence, from supporting engineers to understanding everyday experiences with AI.

Our goal is to do fundamental research, invent new technology, and create frameworks for design in order to drive a human-centered approach to artificial intelligence. And we want to be as open as possible: we're building open source tools that everyone can use, hosting public events, and supporting academics in advancing the state of the art.

Our work

Model interpretability

Can machines explain the "why" behind their decisions? We're investigating ways for people to understand more about ML

Tools for health

We are investigating how AI technology and design can help the practice of clinicians and medical researchers

Marriage rights in US states

Marriage

Same-sex marriage or limited alternative is legally recognized in only a few states. The majority of the states have legally defined marriage to be between a man and a woman or amended the state constitution to ban same-sex marriage. Below are the rights legally extended within the given state.

Laws defining same-sex marriage

Hospital visitation

Federal regulations enacted in 2011 allow patients in hospitals receiving Medicare and Medicaid funding to decide who has visitation rights or can make decisions on their behalf regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity. Visitation regulations at the state-level, below, are typically afforded as the result of a state's recognition of same-sex partners.

Defined visitation rights

Adoption

Laws regarding adoption vary widely by state and are often unclear. All US states allow a single individual the right to petition to adopt a child, though less than half allow a same-sex couple to petition for joint adoption.
